Country Lite :: :: and Town Life.

Selected from an Exchange.

It is one of the discouraging features of the time, that so many young men are leaving the country for the town. The prevailing unrest has seized upon the farmers' sous. One farmer has three or four sons reared to farm life, another has five or six, another may have but one; but one and all may often leave him, often going away sore ly against his wishes and his interest. The movement is going on more or less everywhere, not only near great cities but near small towns. Not only are ancestral estates near New York, for instance, going to decay, or passing in'o the hands of toreign immigrants because the young men who inherited them have chosen to cast themselves into the whirl-pool of the city, many of them only to be ruined by its tempations, a few of them to succeed; but even in the quiet towns, remote from the great centres of trade, country boys ere found in growing numbers, who ave left the farm, and its beautiful ife, for the confinement of the town ()ne who was reared in the country and loves it dearly, and whose long residence in the cities and towns, makee him return with longing to his first love, may be allowed to invite the restless boys only to briefly compare town life with country life, in the hope of nvincing them of their mistake in exchanging the one for the other. In the town there is more stir and xcitement, more to see and hear, more ociety, greater variety of amusement and of instruction, and what is more important to the majority, greater adantages for making money. But these lesirable conditions are offset by the reater temptations to vice and excess to extravagant living, to wild speculations and trade-gambling; while here is less repose for mind and body, and life is largely artificial and unnat-

But in the country we are in the embrace of Mother Nature, [who gives us pure air unpoisoned by the bad nells of the town, sunlight unobstruct. ed by tall and clustered buildings, blue kies undimmed by the reek of a thouand chimneys, and clouds ever changg in their hues and assuming evernore new shapes majestic or fantastic. a in invigorating winds blowing ree over forest and field, the breeze whispers among the trees and sighs in he pines; we flear the song of the birds, and the music of "The brook that all night long, In the leafy month of June, Singeth in the woods a quiet time."

Our ears are greeted with the lowing of kine, the bleating of sheep and goats the crowing of cocks, the gabble of grees and quack of ducks, the cheerful clack, clack, of guines fowls, the cluck of hens to their chicks-all softened and harmonized by distance and un confined spaces. These and all other sights and voices of Nature are freely

It is indeed true, as the poet Cowper

"God made the country, But man made the town;"

and a thoughtful mind in Nature's do main finds "tongues in trees, sermons in stones, books in the running brooks, a id good in everything."

There is, it is true, in much of country life a lack of society, of amusement and of opportunity of self-culture. But with ever extending railroads, with the growing movement for good country pads, and above all with the free delivry of mails, country folks are brought more and more in touch with the town and nearer a market for their produce. The country for the same reason, is growing more accessible, and also more attractive to town folks; many of whom during the summer, but are exchanging their city homes for surburban homes, men spending their business hours in the city, and passing their evenings and nights in the country.

Farmers, again, do not realize their inportance in the political economy If they who produce the necessaries of life and some of its luxuries; and they furnish the sinews of power; withut them there can be no government. no anything, and we would relapse into the savage state. The meats and readstuffs which they raise sustain armies and navice which defend their country. The very gamblers who assume to regulate the prices of the farmer's produce, and often defraud him of his hardly earned profits, are dependent on him for the means of their living. With sublime patience he turnishes them a base from which to carry on their nefarious warfare against himself. In paradoxical fact, it is he that

Thousands of the strongest testimonials from the best known and most reliable men and women of our country fully sustain the claims made by Dr. Phelps regarding his incomparable Paine's Celery Compound.

One of the most convincing proofs furnished, comes recently from a gentleman widely known in the capital city of the Dominion of Canada. We refer to Mr. Alfred Brown, 91 O'Connor St., Ottawa, Ont. Mr. Brown's letter fully demonstrates the fact that the reatest sufferer may cast off his or her bur of disease and become well, strong, and happy.
It proves, too, that the great medicine maintains more fully than ever before its unrivaled place in the estimation of people of wealth and social standing as well as with the masses. Mr. Brown says:—

"I acknowledge with thankfulness and pleasure the fact that I have been cured of a very painful illness of eight years' standing by use of Paine's Celery Compound. I had, during the years of my illness, tried almost all the advertised medicines without deriving any good results. I was also treated by several of the best doctors of this city, hoping to find that one of them, at least, would understand

It is true, that the conditions of farm life are often hard, and the home surroundings of the farmer most unfavorable. The refinements and conveniences of life now so common in towns are often wholly lacking to him, and even ordinary comforts are not seen in the homes of well-to-do farmers. But all this can soon be changed for the better with the growing taste and demand for these, as education advances and communication with towns

There is no happier life than that of the farmer whose land is well tilled, whose forests and fences are well kept, whose stock is duly improved and cared for, and pastures well set in clover or imothy or other grasses; whose home is kept in good repair and neatly ordered : whose table is supplied with whole . some food well cooked and presented; whose grounds are adorned with flowers, lawns, trees and shrubbery; whose garden is well enriched and cultivated in successive crops of vegetables ; whose orchard is stocked with fruit of the best varieties.

Of course, all this takes time, outlay, taste, judgment, and above all industry. But it pays and abundantly pays, in the end, by adding to the comfort and pleasure of living, and thus rendernot only resort to it in greater numbers ing the farmer more contented with his calling.
